

The Ocean Falling From the Sky

Julia Gordon

Grey clouds in the sky as the rain would come and then would go by

The pitter-patter of the rain would make the ceiling come alive

Then it stops...

A moment of stillness

A minute passes by

Silence beyond silence, A storm is creeping

Another minute passes

Drip...drip

Is it from the outside? No, the rain is inside!

Water creeps up the walls slowly but surely

Take a closer look out and you will see...

That the ocean is falling from the sky!

the trees split from pressure

Flowers die from being overwatered

Bugs start floating around all because of the water

The outside may have changed but the inside is a lot slower

The carpet is soaked, not damp anymore

1 inch, 2 inch, up and up it goes!

The house creaks, I know the roof will give out anytime

Thinking about the past now, the mistakes made

It is too late now, maybe we should have made a difference, then maybe we wouldn't be taken down

The water rushes in with a wave of goodbye

Submerged in the water, can't breathe

Then all of a sudden, the land comes back...

Carpets are dry

Nothing inside is wet

Trees sway in the wind

The cars move across the road faster than lightning

It was all a dream; I just hope it doesn't come reality

Turning off the lights during the day may help!

Whatever will make the glaciers not melt

We have got to stop this

Before it is too late and we are all taken down

By the ocean falling from the sky
