

The Coast Washes Away

Lauren McTernan

The bittersweet sense of liability
Waves washing out the sound of grief
Drifting away from my feeling of longing
The tide had finally lost

Losing our reefs, our fish, our orcas
Ropes tangled, sea creatures gasping for life
Oil spilled, no one to clean it up but the fish that are there to drown in their home

An “accident” that costs the lives of our friends
Who will be there to swim again?
Our own mismanagement, our own selfish greed
All for a dime at the cost of our Sea

Losing more time
Our ocean is done calling
The coast fades away
Her tears finally stop falling.
